The Intersection of Public Health and Uniformed/Military Medicine

This session will focus on the growing need for public and community health awareness in Military Medicine. The last few years have seen a major military public health presence in such devastating events as the earthquake in Haiti and the Tsunami and its aftermath in Southeast Asia. Each of the services including the Public Health Service has addressed the skills and positioning staff to appropriately address these immense needs.

At the conclusion of this session, participants will be able to:

1. Describe the efforts underway by the Army, Navy, Air Force in the pursuit of prevention of illness both for troops and for the populace
2. Identify interactions in the prevention approach which cross-cuts all uniformed services
3. Describe the educational efforts undertaken by our uniformed troops in bringing public health concepts on a global basis
